The French RI emerging?

The French Internationalists in the 2011 TRIP survey

Jeremiah Cornut

Jeremiah Cornut is a postdoc at McGill University in Montreal where he studied the theory of international relations and foreign policy Canadian diplomacy practices. He has published in the Canadian Journal of Political Science, Policy and Corporate and International Journal (McGill University, 845 Sherbrooke Street West, Montreal (Quebec) H3A 0G4, Canada).

Dario Battistella

SUMMARY

This article provides an overview of International Relations (IR) French from the responses obtained in the fourth survey TRIP (Teaching, Research, and International Policy) which internationalists 466 from 20 different countries - and among them, 101 French - participated in September 2011. The picture that emerges from this study - on the role of IR in the French university, the possible existence of RI to French, French Internationalist positioning relative to current trends in global RI, their attitude practitioners of international relations, and the issue of the French language - is ambiguous to draw the bifurcations of the emergence of French RI, although a number of things into perspective calls this finding.

Emerging French IR?

Cet article vise à étudier le statut des Relations Internationales, ondulé, French academy and in the overall discipline of IR, on the basis of the answers collected in the fourth TRI (Teaching, Research, and International Policy) survey, for which 466 scholars from 20 different countries and, among them, 101 French IR scholars - have participated in September 2011. Provided the answers to questions regarding the place of RI in French academia, the so-called French school of IR, multilateralism, French entry in the overall discipline, the link between theory and practice and the effect of language, show an ambiguous picture: there are clear indications that French RI is emerging, even though some indicators show that this emergence remains partial.

PLAN ARTICLE

- Place of International Relations in the French university
- RI of the French?
- What exchanges between France and the international RI?
- What role theory and its practice?
- The issue of language
- Appendix 1 - Description of the protocol used
- Appendix 2 - List of questions only in the French survey (Section V)
- Schedule